The Ambition of Mark Truitt

HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

"THE MAN HIGHER UP." "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

head; it fell back with a thud,

"I can't do it," he groaned.

But the mills-and Kazia!

aged to hold what he had won.

started slowly down the weedy road.

and limped on until weakness over

More than an hour later he was still lurching along the road. Kasia and the mills! They were in danger, they were being taken from him; he must

So he beat his way slowly along moonlit stretches of rough road, through darkened ravines where only instinct found a path, until at last,

squall died away, full darkness fell,

the train she was to have taken with

Piotr rolled to a stop at the station turned. The sense grew heavier, pas-her foreboding she went out into the night and walked about again in the place she had once thought of as a haven. But she quickly left the rambling old village, seen for the first time, yet holding so many memories of which she must not think, and went over to the new Bethel with its wide-saw them as they would be when they

She left the cluster of homes-to-be and retraced her steps over the street

that led past the mills to the bridge, started to cross. But at the entrance she stopped. Everywhere it was the same, a redolence of him. After all,

to her Bethel, the haven, was just

All her fine resolutions and philosoof the river, the woods in their au-

had revivified the scenes of her one

She did not think that there might

"Oh, I shouldn't have come. I want have him. It would be the cruelest

Thus she told hope—the immortal!

them grow, Often at night, when across the river to realize again that after so many years his dreams were

That night he left his seat on the but patiently awaiting the absent never before come within his ken.

"Is anything wrong, ma'am?"

"Is there anything I kin do fur ye?"

She found her voice. "It is nothing." She tried to smile. "Sometimes women cry for nothing, about little here, ain't ye? I'm Simon Truitt."

She started. "You're his father?"

Simon noted the unconscious use of

"Some women do," Simon answered

She shook her head.

o do it fur ye."

Again the silent gesture.

"If there is," he persisted:

be some to see. She was weeping, head bowed on the bridge rail.

cared. I was wrong to come."

coming magnificently true.

lifted her head.

to her.

looming huge before him.

save them.

kindness

Mark Truitt.

happiness.

other.

came him once more and he fell. .

"I've got to do it. I must stop him.

Then began a fight to sit up, to

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

CHAPTER XXIX-Continued.

Piotr did not move from his corner. "Ah!" It was almost a sob. "They're stalled. With an effort he forced his me. It was always so. Everybody was for you. You had everything. It came easy to you. It came hard to me, so hard I could never do anything or get

"Yes, yes, Plotr, I know. But we're I must get to her." going to change that now. Come along -the rain's stopped and I must hurry." "To get back to her, I suppose?" trying to drag him back into the blackness. How long the struggle lasted, Plotr sighed

"I must get back to her. Come on." | by what degrees he progressed, he did "I don't think I-" Plotr's words not know; but when it was over he came between gasps. Something was leaning weakly against the door seemed to be choking him. "In a jamb. His brain was reeling, he minute. I-I must get-some things." breathed sobbingly, but by bracing him-

Mark looked quickly back over his self desperately with the cane, recovshoulder, caught by an odd change in ered in the struggle to stand, he manthe plaintive voice. Dusk was gathering rapidly, deepening the shadows in the shed, and he could barely see the steadiness came to the trembling figure fumbling about in his corner, limbs. Summoning all his will, he There was a pause-Plotr's search passed with uncertain dragging steps seemed to have been successful—then out of the shed. A cold damp wind a metallic click. Mark whirled sharply on him.

"Plotr-!" "Ah!" It was not a sob now, but a low gutteral growl, throbbing with hate and triumph.

Plotr, too, whirled. From his corner a point of flame leaped out toward Mark, another-another-until six shots had rung out. At the last Mark's head drooped forward, his body swayed slowly and fell in a crumpled heap across the doorway.

From Piotr's Corner a Point of Flame Leaped Out Toward Mark.

When he awoke he was being dragged by his wounded shoulder in such fashion that his head scraped along the floor. He did not realize so much, merely that his pain had increased a hundredfold. He tried to cry out, but could only lie limp and stlent. Then he felt a hand passing over his face and a voice that seemed very far away muttering fretfully.

"I wonder if you're dving or shamming. It would be like you to sham. I didn't mean to shoot then. I didn't want you to die until you knew the mills were gone. But I had to-when you looked at me that way, I had to."

Mark heard, but the words meant nothing to him. The voice muttered on; detached sentences came to him. "It isn't so easy as I thought . .

I'd better go now, while I can. . . . I'm afraid. I never drove a horse. . . Twice, coming here, I fell. I thought I was dead, but it didn't go off-I don't know why. . . . I'd like to tell you about Kazia's doctor. I saw them one night and followed them. You wouldn't believe it of her, would you? It nearly killed me. . . . It was your fault. You ran away from her. . . . It would be easy to drive off the road and fall in the dark. . . . I'm tired, and I tremble. Seeing you makes it worse. . . . I keep wondering what they'll do to me. . . . When the mills are gone, I'm coming back to you, I guess you'll stay. . . Maybe I'd better finish you now-you're so lucky al-Ways." Mark felt the hand again, now at his throat, pressing hard. He tried to protest: "That is quite superfluous," but the pressure would not let him. When blackness was closing in on him once more, the grip relaxed.

But he did not quite lose consciousness this time. He heard the other move about, still muttering, then pass out. The sound of wheels and the horse's tramping through the tall weeds died away in the distance. At first Mark lay inert. A mortal weakness held him. He could realize only the pain. He wanted nothing but to lie prone and motionless. . disturbing thought began to tug at his brain. He ought not to be there. There was a thing he must do, some one he must see. What was it?

"Kazia!" The name gave him a thrilling shock that sharpened the pain but cleared his mind a little.

And the mills! The mills! Kazta and the mills! The two thoughts were inextricably mingled.

With a rush came realization of his ma'am. Did ye know him, back there plight. Plotr, the puny whimpering in the city?"

She nodded, not trusting herself to PHARAMARA BARAMARA B speak, and turned her face from the moonlight. She seemed to be struggling again with a rising sob.

Simon found himself peering, closely and unintentionally, into her eyes. He | see her. stepped hastily back and heard himself speaking with a boldness he did ably it's his last chance." not recognize,

"Mebby it was fur him ye wereit's fur ye he's be'n grievin'?" "It couldn't be that."

"I've wondered. Often I've come on him when he thought he was alone, jest settin' and lookin' at nothin'-an' grievin', I know." Simon's face, too, sought the shadow. "I know." madman who cringed before a squall,

"It might be because of me but nothad shot him and was on his way to blow up the mills. Piotr must be fore-"Not because he wants ye, ye mean? But it could be that. 'Tain't likely still for you against everybody, against eyes open and held them so until the he'd find two such women as ye, even in the city. An' 'tain't likely he'd first giddiness passed. He raised his trouble so much, if there wasn't a woman in it. I wish ye could give him what he needs." can't have that," stand, to beat off the invisible hands "If he's jest wantin' some one, there's a way he could have it."

weartly "No. I don't understand. That's the

how. There's nothin' I can give him." | carefully around her. He turned his face away from her, looking up at the furnace, big and menacing, outlined against the sky. His brain cleared again, a little There was silence among the mills. From the old village behind them came faint vague sounds of life-a distant tinkle of laughter, a crying child, a neighing horse. From the new town breathed refreshingly upon him, He beyond the mills came no sound but a gripped his cane more tightly and single voice in song, a wild eery chant that had been brought from another He reached the foot of the hill and land. The song was finished. Kazia sank down in a little rain pool, rested and Simon stirred, as though they had pantingly and laved his hot face a few been waiting for its close to bring minutes, then staggered to his feet their strange encounter to an end.

"What's that?" Both started. From somewhere near them had come a sudden muffled cackle of mirthless uncanny laughter. "Sounds 's if it come from the furnace. There hadn't oughter be anybody 'round here. But I guess it's just the watchman in the power house. The still night makes it sound like that." But even as he spoke they saw the figure of a man crawling from behind rounding a curve, he saw the furnace the furnace. He scrambled to his feet and began to run, with an awkward As hours passed and Mark did hobbling galt, up the tracks toward not return, a sense of an approaching the bridge. The moonlight fell full on crisis, of a danger, came to Kazia. The his face. "Piotr!" As the cry, in a voice he knew, reached him, the man stopped sud- said in the Matka's tongue. and out again, and still he had not re- denly, stared wildly about and saw the two figures advancing on him. He sive waiting unbearable. To escape raised his hands in a frantic gesture.

"Kazia! Go back-go back!" She did not heed his warning. "Plotr What are you doing?"

"Go back!" he screamed. be killed. It's dynamite!"

Instantly the others guessed what impended. Kazia heard a low moan beside her, saw Simon run, as fast as paved streets and rows of pretty little his age-stiffened limbs allowed, toward cottages. Many of the cottages were the furnace, as if he thought to avert dark and untenanted as yet, but she the imminent destruction.

"You mustn't!" she cried. "Come were the homes of a happy folk who back!" tolled without exhaustion or fear, with If the old man heard, he did not obey. She fied after him, in instinctive > purpose to drag him back out of danger. They reached Piotr, passed him. He stood bewildered, glancing uncertainly toward the refuge of the woods. Then, with a low whimpering cry, he, too, joined in that moonlight race. He could not have overtaken her, had she not tripped and fallen over a switch.

phy had become insufficient. The sight shudderingly. "Kazia, I didn't want to hurt you." tumnal glory, the song of the rapids

He flung himself upon her, moaning

Simon sped on. That was what Mark Truitt, crouching where he had last fallen, saw just before the explosion came. There was a hoarse deafening roar. The great furnace seemed to reel, then toppled and fell.

him-him. And I have no right to They found him weakly trying to remove the debris from a place near thing I could do to him-even if he the edge of the ruin. They drew him aside and a hundred strong hands took up his task. Soon they found the dead old Simon had no skill for it and Piotr and under him Kazia, still breathing. It was not until daybreak hence no part in the building of the that they came to Simon.

mills. But he spent his days watching Karia was carried to the village and laid in Doctor Hedges' own house. All Bethel was sleeping, he would slip through the night and in the morning, until the great surgeon from the city came, he fought off death. Then the surgeon took up the fight with a knowledge and skill the old doctor did stoop, where he had been wonderingly not possess. For two days they did not sleep but watched and battled.

In the adjoining room a man, him-Mark, and trudged down to the river and across the bridge. He saw the self the object of the doctor's care, figure leaning on the rail at the farther passed through his Gethsemane. The end, but not until he was close did he dead, his own pain and weakness, all see it was that of a weeping woman. else, were forgotten in his agony for He would have turned aside, but he the one who, it seemed, could not live. perceived that she had heard him and Sometimes he would rise from the couch where they had laid him and He stopped short, staring in astoncreep into the other room to join the watchers there until the sight of the ishment at the woman, a sort that had still, bandaged form became more than After a moment's hesitation he went he could bear. Then he would let them lead him back to his couch. His lips moved constantly, in what words he did not know. Their burden was the cry of all Gethsemanes. "Let this cup pass from me."

So the miracle was made perfect. Toward the last of that watch his weakness began to overcome him. The doctors supposed he slept and said: "It is best." He did not sleep. He had lost sense of his surroundings but his brain was alive. He was fighting, gravely. "I guess ye're a stranger struggling supremely, to hold her back from the precipice over which she was slowly falling. Once she seemed to be elipping from his clasp. He heard her the pronoun. "Mark's, ye mean? Yes, piteous cry to him.

He rose with a start and tottered

"She called me," he whispered. would have led him back to his couch. for her, thrilling her with its summons, But Mark resisted.

"I tell you, she called me. I must "Let him," said the surgeon. "Prob-

Hedges released him and Mark went over to her. He dropped to his knees But I hadn't oughter ask that. Mebby by the bedside and kissed, very gently, the arm outlined under the sheet.

> "Kazia," he whispered. "My wife, my love, don't leave me! Can't you hear, dear?-the miracle has come! He thought that she sighed, as does a tired child when it sinks to sleep, and that a little smile touched the pale

The others did not see, but then they had not heard her call.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Ultimate Purpose

It was an Indian summer day, when the sun paused to smile genially back "What he needs is to have his life over his shoulder at the earth he was made over from the beginning. He leaving to winter's cold mercy, and a warm wind blew softly. Toward noon Kazia, leaning on the doctor and his buxom wife, was helped to the front "You don't understand," she said porch, where the Matka was waiting with cushions and shawls. In a big rocking chair the convalescent was trouble. I'd like to help him, to give made comfortable, with cushions at him what he needs. But I don't know | head and feet and the shawls tucked

> "You're sure you're warm enough?" queried Mrs. Hedges, with needless anxiety.

"Quite sure. You all spoil me with kindness.

Mrs. Hedges gave a last pat to the cushion behind Kazia's head. "You take a deal of spoiling, I think, dearie." treacherously ready that morning. "Then," drawled the doctor, "you're thinking of leaving us?" "I must-soon." But under the doctor's twinkling gaze a girlish flush sprang into view-perhaps to keep the tears company. "Too much color," chuckled the doc tor. "Let me feel your pulse."

The crimson deepened and as in stantly vanished. "I've a cake in the oven," Mrs. Hedges suddenly remembered. "Doctor, I'll need you."

"Need me?" The doctor started. Am I a-" "At once, Doctor," came a stern command from the hall. "Eh? Oh-!" A light broke in upon him and he chuckled again. "Coming, my dear, coming!"

The Matka, too, would have left her, but Kazia stayed her. "Don't go," she The old woman halted, irresolute.

'He, your lover, will be coming soon.' Timidly she laid a thin knotted hand on the scarf enshrouding Kazla's hair. Kazia ignored that, "You will hate to leave this place, won't you?" The Matka nodded. "There is peace here. Even the old smile and make feets, and they grow old easily, as a child grows into youth. And my Plotr is here." Her eyes sought a distant hillside, where white stones gleamed in the sunshine.

"But we must go. I don't belong here. What would these kind people think if they knew"-the voice broke a little-"what you know."

I know nothing, except that you love and are loved. Such love I have never seen. It is not the love your mother and her lover had. All here know and are glad of it. I do not think you can go and leave him unhappy." And the Matka stole away. "It came too late."

This is the First Time Since the Ac cident That I've Seen You Alone."

Kazia's lips said that and the waitng tears overflowed, lingering gemlike on the fringe of closed lashes. A thousand times she had repeated the words to herself since the first hour of consciousness when she had seen him bending over her. She thought she believed it. But her fast-beating heart, as she awaited her lover's coming, sounded another answer.

The heavy throbbing ceased, began again, keeping time with a trampling of hoofs from down the street. Her closed eyes did not open even when the trampling ceased and she heard his step, punctuated by the ring of cane on gravel, until his step, too, ceased and she felt him near her, his gaze upon her. She dreaded to meet that gaze. Slowly the reluctant lids opened

Hedges thought it was delirium and the light in his eyes, transfiguring him | One sin is much like another. And was not to be mistaken for the fire that had flamed there at other times, ties working but,

"It is not too late," her heart was crying, and she tried in vain to stiffe | hind." its song.

But he did not press her then with impetuous wooing. "Do you realize," he said gravely, 'this is the first time since the accident I've seen you alone?" "Yes, I-" she began stammeringly. The others have just gone in. If you call them, they will come."

things to show you today, and the doctor sets an absurd limit to our drive." He rapped on the door and the doctor appeared, and behind him the Matka. Then, while the Matka piled the cushions in the seat, Mark and the doctor helped Kazia over the little

"Then," he smiled reassuringly, "I will call them at once, for I have many walk and into the buggy. "And mind you," the doctor adjured them, as Mark got in and the horse started, "two hours at the most-if you can keep track of the time!"

Then he gently led the Matka back into the house. For she, who had forgotten how to weep for sorrow, was weeping now for the joy awaiting Kazia First Mark drove, very slowly and carefully, through the old village and across the bridge until he came to its middle point. There he stopped.

The mills were no longer lifeless and slient, A row of giant stacks spouted clouds of heavy black smoke that fluttered lazily away in the breeze in long wavering pennons. Through Kazia sighed. "I'll hate to leave the power house windows the watchyou." Tears, for some reason, were ers caught a glimpse of great fly wheels whirling and bright pistons plunging. From the rolling mills beyond came a low monitory rumble of engines stirring tentatively, testing their sinews as they waited to pounce upon and torture the coming steel. And before them towered the rebuilt furnace, alive now and discordantly vocal with its first labor. Thither Mark pointed.

"Watch now! We're just in time. Our first tap!"

As he spoke, the shrick of the checked blast rose, drowning all other sounds, and the crew of men working at the furnace mouth sprang back. Out of a circle of darting fires forth leaped a molten deadly flood. A channel in the sloping sand-bed received it and bore it swiftly, in a dozen branches, to the waiting ladles. Little gaseous flames played impishly over the golden surface. The stench of burning sulphur arose. As the cascading flood filled the ladles, drops splashed out upon the ground and burst in a thousand tiny points of light. Almost before Kazia realized it, the flood had subsided and the full ladles were moving away. He drove on and took the long winding road that led past Hedges' Hillthough he did not remind her of his meeting with Piotr-and after many miles circled back to the village, They talked little, and perhaps that little was hardly worthy of a record. Kazia lay back in her cushions, her eyes folsome new beauty to her. "How could you leave it?" she murwhen she had heard of it from the adventuring youth, have found you. So-I'm glad I went."

She made no answer to that. Farther on they came to a branch oad that once he had known. He followed it a while until there came to them a delicious spring-like fragrance He stopped the horse again

"I thought I could find it. See!" He pointed to an old tree that stood mass of fresh green leaves and snowy blossoms, a little away from the roadside. What is it?"

"A pear tree," "But it's autumn and I thought-She glanced up at him wonderingly. "Every fall that tree puts out a new set of leaves and blossoms. You see, there is new life even after spring has She looked long and earnestly at the blossoming tree. "But winter will come and the blossoms will wither fruitless." No longer could be refuse words to his longing. "Ah! my dear," he cried, "let us forget signs and symbols. There is is you!" such a thing as new birth. And it's always spring where there is love. You will forgive me," he laughed unsteadily, "If I talk like a very young poet, for I am very, very happy today." A touch of the old ready color was glowing faintly in her wan cheeks, "Have you looked enough?" he

"For, if you have, we must go. It will be getting chilly soon. And | see out there?" besides, they are waiting for us." "Waiting-?" "Yes. Didn't you know? Doctor

Courtney is to marry us tonight." eyes to his. "Oh, Mark, don't ask me that, I "Did you think I'd let you go again? Did you think you could? Only one it is you. . . . This peace, this content thing in the world could make me let -I can't believe yet that they are you go-if you can say you don't love true, that they always will be true me. And you can't say that."

have this day-"

"No, I can't-say that. But don't ask me. Don't you see, it would be cruel to you-it would be worse for me. You forget now-but some day you would remember-that I- Ah! don't force me to say it!" Her thin wasted hands went to her might see he had not flinched. "Kasia, just this once we'll speak . . and dread took wings, like a night of the past, and then we'll put it for 4, 1845.

bird that had seen the first light. And ever away where the past belongs. for every scar you have I can show many. I ask you to forgive, you have forgiven much. Can't you trust me to or for the pity of one seeing his cruel- forget a little? And, dear, all thatall the sins and shadows-were part of a man and woman we have left be-

She seemed so weak and fragile, lying there, this wraith of the old Kazia, torn by love and fear! A sudden mist shut her from his sight. An unspeakable tenderness welled up within him, lending to his husky broken phrases a supreme eloquence she needed to hear.

"But this love—the Kasia that called it to life are part of the new life. It began those days when we thought you couldn't live and I learned what love is and what it would mean to lose

"Ah! Take Me!"

you. It will never end. Is it I you doubt? Dear, I know-I know. And I need you. Can't you understand, I need you? You won't, you can't, fail me now?

"You don't know what you ask," she whispered. "But I can't fight against it any longer-I want you so. Only promise me-when you rememberyou won't let me know.'

"I promise, Kazia-!" "Ah! Take me."

A sob shook her and she swayed toward him. He caught her and drew her very gently to him. . . . After a little she smiled through her tears. It was evening and the others had gone, leaving them alone again.

There was no light but the glow of embers on the hearth in the little cottage that was to be their home for a while. But it was enough for them, in whose hearts the unquenchable torch was glowing, revealing beauties and glories they never had known. They sat very close, watching-and listening.

For the silence of the hills was ended forever. Throughout that day as the iron they had seen flowing advanced toward its destiny, the new creature that had come into the valley had been awakening to full life. Sec lowing his hand as he pointed out tion after section had received the lifegiving power, until now all the huge mechanism was in motion, driving, mured, as often she had exclaimed whirting, pounding at top speed. The earth quivered in answer to its pulsation. Crunching metal, raging blasts. "But if I hadn't left it, I shouldn't fires such as served at the creation, lifted their voices in chorus-an ode of the elements to man the master, the song of steel. A terrible song whose beauty only the understanding might discern-singing madly of power and passion and purpose, of struggle and death, of birth and life, of triumph and steadfast strength. To the lovers, rich in the knowledge that comes only after sin and payment and release, the song came not in vain "Ought you to be there?" she whis pered. "Not tonight, dear." "Could we see it from here?" He helped her to a chair by the south window and stood at her side while she saw, The night sketched the drama of steel for her. Again the great furnace was setting free its lambent flood. Under open sheds were gleaming the sun-bright mouths of other furnaces where the iron boiled and bolled and became steel. "Ah!" Wonderment and adoration were in her cry. "And it is yours it

"Not I, not mine! I don't know how many generations of men gave themselves that we might have that, I know it was not for me, for any man. For all who suffer and toil."

His face was set sternly toward the mills. For a long time he was silent. "What is it?" And she broke the silence with a whisper. "What do you Sternness melted into tenderness.

"A parable," he smiled down on her, "of our lives of life. Desire and disillusionment, battle and toll, conquest The color vanished and she shrank and failure, evil and shame—the fires back from him, lifting piteous pleading and pressures that burn us and shape His hand rested on her hair "And the purpose in which the real can't-I can't. Couldn't you let me life begins."

"Ah! I wouldn't have you different. But to me-to me life isn't a parable-Ah! Teach me, teach me!" . . ."

Winthrop's Tosst.

Our Country-whether bounded by the St. John's and the Sabine, or however otherwise bounded or described. and be the measures more or lessface, but he drew them away that she still, Our Country, to be cherished in all our hearts, to be defended by all our hands.-- Hobert C. Winthrop, Jab

Digestive Disorders Yield When

the right help is sought at the right time. Indigestion is a torment. Billiousness causes suffering. Either is likely to lead to worse and weakening sickness. The right help, the best corrective for disordered conditions of the stomach, liver, kidneys or bowels is now known to be

Beecham's

and the right time to take this famous family remedy is at the first sign of coming trouble. Beecham's Pills have so immediate an effect for good, by cleansing the system and purifying the blood, that you will know after a few doses they

Are the Remedial

Largest Sale of Any Medicine in the Worl

DR. J. D. KELLOGG'S

Remedy for the prompt relief of Asthma and Hay Fever. Ask Your NORTHRUP & LYMAN CO., Ltd., BUFFALO, N.Y.

FABLE THAT CARRIES MORAL

Comparison of Lusty Falsehood With Certain Closs of Truths is Worth Consideration.

A fox that was caught in a farmer's hen coop concluded that prevarication might save him. In response to the farmer's query as to what he meant by stealing chickens, the fox said: "I never stole chickens in my life. I'm a vegetarian."

"What were you doing in my hen

"I merely stopped here to talk about the war from a perfectly neutral standpoint.

"But how about that dead and halfeaten chicken? Perhaps you know nothing about that?" "But I do, though," said the fox. "A mink did that. He ran away at your the smell of fresh blood made me sick and faint." When the farmer regained consciousness the fox was gone and so approach. I would have left, too, but was another fat hen. Moral: An athletic falsehood is better than a kindergarten truth.

A newcomer to Idaho from the strictly prohibition state of Kansas had the misfortune one wintry day to fall into the rapids of a swift-running river when the thermometer stood several degrees below zero. He was saved with difficulty, and his clothes became a rattling sheath of ice before his rescuers could get him to the nearest saloon. "What'll you have, Dan?" inquired the barkeep," solicitously. The Kansan opened his eyes and answered weakly: "Guess I'll take a glass of lemonade.-Lippincott's.

Modern Solomon.

"I have seven wives," explained the inspeakable Turk to the interviewer. "Great Caesar! How do you manage to pay your dressmaker's bills?" "I married dressmakers, son of an infidel."-Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Superior—

"Surpassing others in greatness, goodness, extent or value of any quality."-

That's the definition, and that's why Post Toasties are called the Superior Corn Flakes

-the surpassing, delicate Indian Corn flavour being sealed in by skillful toasting with sugar and salt.

Post Toasties

are made in clean, airy, modern factories-cooked, seasoned, rolled and toasted to crisp golden flakes-

Ready to serve direct from the package. To secure the Superior

Post Toasties

Corn Flakes, ask for

-sold by Grocers.